Overview

About Jeremy

Jeremy J. Monaldo is a principal in the Washington, D.C.*, office of Fish & Richardson P.C. His practice supports contentious inter partes reviews (IPRs), ex parte post-grant work, and patent prosecution. In particular, Jeremy's practice emphasizes prosecuting patent applications, reexamination requests and post-grant petitions, and patent-related opinions in the electrical and computer arts. Jeremy has been named as counsel in more than 80 IPR proceedings and has been involved in counseling on IPR strategy in numerous other matters, including several presently ongoing matters that may result in IPR petitions being filed. In addition, Jeremy has been involved in over twenty reexamination proceedings before the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office, often with co-pending litigation.

In addition, he has experience as an electrical engineer with the National Institutes of Health (2003). Mr. Monaldo was an undergraduate teaching fellow for the University of Maryland for a course in C programming (2000-2001).

*Admitted only in Maryland. Not admitted to practice in D.C. Work conducted in D.C. is directly supervised by a member of the D.C. bar.
