Overview

About Kayleigh

Kayleigh McGlynn is a litigation associate in the Boston office of Fish & Richardson P.C. Kayleigh was previously a summer associate at Fish.

During law school, Kayleigh served as the electronic supplement editor for the Boston College Law Review and editor-in-chief of the Boston College Intellectual Property & Technology Forum. Kayleigh was a research assistant for J. Donald Monan, S.J., University Professor of Law, Daniel R. Coquillette, working on the Harvard Law School history project. Kayleigh interned with the Boston College Innocence Clinic, where she investigated clients' cases of wrongful conviction and also advocated for improvements to the Massachusetts statute that provides reentry services and compensation to exonerees. In connection with this clinical work, she was named a Boston College Law School public interest designation fellow and awarded pro bono excellence. Kayleigh also interned with the U.S. Attorney's office for the District of Massachusetts in the economic crimes unit and cybercrime unit.

Prior to attending law school, Kayleigh worked as a research scientist at a biotechnology company focused in the area of molecular diagnostics. Kayleigh's work concentrated on the development of reagents for the collection and stabilization of clinical patient samples prior to molecular testing, primarily with polymerase chain reaction (PCR).
