Overview

Olivia Nguyen focuses her practice on intellectual property litigation, commercial litigation, and related counseling for clients primarily in the technology sector. She regularly works on significant IP infringement cases, handling issues relating to document discovery, fact and expert witness depositions and examinations, claim construction, noninfringement, invalidity, dispositive motions, and damages.

She has practiced in U.S. District Courts, the U.S. International Trade Commission, and the Patent Trial and Appeal Board. Her practice also encompasses pre-litigation counseling, having advised her clients on product development, competitive intelligence, trade secret management, due diligence, and IP acquisition and licensing matters.

With a technical background in molecular and cell biology and a decade of experience litigating in a vast range of technologies, Olivia becomes well-versed in each clients' technologies. She has particular experience in consumer products, medical devices, telecommunications networks and devices, semiconductors, and software.

Olivia has maintained an active pro bono practice throughout her career, including successful representation of asylum seekers and military personnel.

Outside her practice, Olivia is a lifelong student of foreign languages, and can speak Vietnamese, French, and Italian.
